FOREWORD

THE Second Biennial Exhibition of Contemporary American Painting constitutes the third in the series, inaugurated in 1932, of alternating exhibitions, one year of paintings in oil, the following year of sculpture, watercolors, drawings and prints.

To make the present exhibition representative of the various trends of painting throughout the country, one hundred fifty-three artists have been invited to contribute canvases of their own selection. As in our previous biennials, no prizes will be awarded, and again the sum of twenty thousand dollars has been set aside for the purchase of works of outstanding excellence from the exhibition.

It is almost inevitable that the limitations of space should compel the exclusion of many artists who are of equal importance to those invited. Realizing this, we have not felt strictly bound by the previous invitation lists, but have endeavored to include as many new names as possible. As a result, forty-nine artists are represented in the present exhibition who were not included in the First Biennial Exhibition.

In recent months the world of art has suffered the loss of three distinguished artists, John Kane, David Morrison and Bryson Burroughs. As these artists had accepted the Museum's invitation to exhibit, the work which each had intended to send is included.

We trust this exhibition will represent in a broad way some of the most notable characteristics of American painting today.

NOTE

MOST OF THE PAINTINGS IN THIS EXHIBITION ARE FOR SALE. FOR PRICES AND INFORMATION, VISITORS ARE REQUESTED TO INQUIRE AT THE INFORMATION DESK. NO COMMISSION IS CHARGED BY THE MUSEUM ON SALES MADE
